CORRESPONDENCE.

To the Editor of the Bombay Courier.

SIR,

I am happy to see in your columns the present state of the Native Army undergoing a calm and temperate discussion by the pens of "An Old Soldier" and Vindex. The field they have chosen in which to break a lance with each other, is one so seldom occupied, that independent of the importance of the subject, it possesses all the attractions of novelty.

It has been to me often a matter of astonishment, that composing so powerful a portion of the British Empire as the Native Army of India undoubtedly does, so little should be known about it and so little cared; much of this is owing to our own apathy: we are willing enough to handle the sword, but quill driving is quite a different affair. Will any of your readers point out other causes for the astonishing fact, that an Army of some 200,000 men, officered from every country in the united kingdom, is known, talked about, or cared for just as little or perhaps less, than if we appertained to his most Celestial Majesty the Emperior of China. Surely this ought not to be, for there may come a time, when a thorough knowledge of what se[rvices] are, may prove of essential importa[nce] people of England.

Vindex gives us a [sketch] but can be [only] field officer [of] sorely aff[licted] The poss[ession] Military body, forbids either of us attempting to produce proof of what we may urge on this head, but I cannot forbear saying, that such compliments as "take away your men, I have seen enough of them," have not been so unusual as could be wished.

That we are better manœuvrers than we were some twenty years ago is likely enough; it would be indeed extraordinary had the great improvement in the European armies produced no effect on ours, associated as we constantly are with Regiments of his Majesty's service. "An old officer" did not however draw our attention to the state of discipline of our men, but to the state of feeling which exists between them and their officers; not being myself of the "ancient regime" I am unable to bear testimony to the correctness of his comparison; the days of our youth are generally the brightest, and often throw a false glare on the view which a retrospection of past events presents to our mind; to the returned exile, how narrow seems the play ground, and how small the dwelling place of his earlier years:—he can recall perhaps to his memory when these struck him to be quite a world in themselves. Such perhaps may be the case of your Veteran correspondent. I admire the feeling which dictated his letter, and could I bring myself to believe that every old officer felt like himself, I would require no further proof of the correctness of his assertion. For seeing the question as one of comparison with what we were, let us bring our minds to the mere useful task of composing our present state with what it ought to be. First, as to the link joining England to India,*—English officers to Indian Soldiers. Is this strengthened by that attachment which ought to and might exist between them, or is it principally a matter of mercenary consideration? Secondly what is the state of our discipline? I fear that a dispassionate inquiry into these two heads, will scarcely bear Vindex out in the high opinion he entertains of us. Should we really need improvement, the first step to a remedy is a knowledge of our disease; let us not allow it to sink deeper into the constitution, by buoying ourselves up with a conceived opinion of our security.

With regard to our feelings towards the Native Soldiery, is not Vindex aware that though we respect their religious prejudices, (for to do this we are compelled, besides it gives no trouble,) there are very few who take delight in studying their character, listening to their little grievance, and acting as a mediator as well as judge, in their quarrels with each other. Let us consider the duty of an officer entrusted with the command of a company; he should know all his men by name, and be well acquainted with their characters both [as] soldiers on parade or in quarters; he should know which of his men are frequent inmates of the Hospital, who are addicted to gambling (a very prevailing vice in many Native corps and who have just claims to his notice for former gallant or good behaviour; the sternness of his authority in their Captain should be blended, with patriarchal kindness. Sepoys are made of very different stuff to a John Bull or a Patlander, and they who would make no difference in their treatment, should be rigidly excluded from the Native army, for evil would be the day of their admission to its ranks. But is it not the common resource of most officers when a complaint is preferred to trust all to the Subedar, or if the point be too knotty for his decision, and it must needs come to the Surkar, to transfer its adjustment to any good easy commanding officer or adjutant, kind hearted enough to take all the trouble on themselves. Is not it the case that in many Regiments the European Officers are looked upon as of no earthly use but to lead on their men in action, and by men who advocate this absurdity (?) is not the good discipline of our Extra Battalions, as compared with many of the line, triumphantly held forth? To what cause are we to attribute the assumption of all the promotions of a Regiment by the commandant and adjutant, without reference to officers commanding Companies, if it be not from an idea that their opinion is not worth consulting? The system which Sir Thomas Bradford did much to uproot even still exits in many corps. The next parade that Verax may command, I pray him for curiosity's sake to make an experiment, whereby to discover how many of his officers know the names of all their men, and how many know those of half a dozen. I will scribble off a few questions such as might assure the desired purpose. Capt Ridebard, pray let me know how many of your men have been wounded in action. Mr. Whipwell be so good as to pick out all those now in your company who have been tried by Courts martial, specifying the reasons why. Capt. Shoot-all-day. You will be pleased to mention to me the numbers of the different casts of your men, how many Bramins, how many Mussulmans, and how many Mahraitas and so forth, and whilst you are about it, pray tell me the average height of your company according to your last measurement. Mr. Love—nautch, Come to the front, if you please; now be so good as to call out by name the men of your company; I want to see how many you can recollect. When was your oldest Sepoy enlisted, and for what particular cause has he been so lo[ng] sed over. Mr. Kill—time. How many de[a]ths and deaths had you last year; how many have you now in hospital, and what are their complaints; how many defaulters have you had since last Review, and what has been the maximum of any one man's punishment?

That an officer who wishes to be beloved by his men, over whom he is placed as a Protector, as well as leader, should qualify himself by an intimate acquaintance with them to answer such questions as the above, cannot be for a moment disputed, and I state it as my sincere opinion, that there is not one out of a dozen who would give satisfactory answers to all the points above mentioned: the reasons for this are too numerous to be included in my present letter. Should my usual indolence allow me, I may perhaps draw them out in battle array hereafter, provided this can be done without breaking through the restraint, I, as a military man must necessarily submit to—suffice it to say, that viewing things as they are, I should be surprised if matters were much better: it is contrary to the general principles actuating human nature, that men should exert themselves in any paths of life without the stimulants of rewards on one hand and punishments on the other.

I find that what I have written will occupy sufficient space in your columns, and must therefore defer till next Saturday's paper, my remarks on the second portion of the subject under discussion.

Yours, Mr. Editor, very obediently,
A SOLDIER.

26th April.

* Far be it from me to make light of the vast strength added to our Empire in India by the portion of H. M. troops stationed in it; I hope I [shall] forget my own country so far as [to] or Mussulman Soldier [is] it is indeed [a] us to

To the Editor of the Bombay Courier.

SIR,

Being unacquainted with the details, which I had generally understood to furnish the ground work for taxing our subjects in this country, I have viewed with unmeasured surprise the discordant statements, lately laid before the public, through the columns of your paper, and others, on this subject, the question recurred continually to my mind, can it be possible so little really is known of the matter? In this mood I eagerly perused the letters of Verax and Protector in your paper of 23d instant; the former as usual I found argumentative, and fair, though somewhat out of my line; the latter full of "denials," and figured statements "challenging contradiction," I concluded must be the practical fellow for my purpose; but what was my surprise after reading his promise "to quote the expences of a variety of Crops on Government land in the Province of Goozeerat," to find his first statement of a farm at Chandore in the Deccan, the second of a farm at Dhoolia, the Civil station in Khandeish; the third at Amulneir in the same province, and the fourth at Mamdoobar; and though I have not met with any place bearing precisely that name, still it is so Khandeshee in sound, that I have no doubt it is intended for some other place in the same famed and fertile valley: but not one of the four statements afford the slightest clue, by which the most enterprising enquirer could discover, what farm in any of these places may be alluded to, so that the "challenge of contradiction" is [perfectly] safe.

Now really, Mr. Editor, when an anon[ymous] writer distorts facts in this manner, [as] up Deccan, and Khandeish statements for Guzeratee, and then expects us to take his assertion upon trust, it exceeds my powers; even relating to mystical matters like these, I cannot credit, and therefore must express my disappointment at them, particularly as I find (on perusing the remainder of Protector's letter) that with similar accuracy, he considers the money or goods with which a man is to pay his just debts, not to be his own, and argues that because poor Ryots are subjected to hard terms when they borrow, therefore the statements of the Pamphlet he wishes to discredit are unfounded, though, what connection there may be between this notable discovery, and the statements he questions, no one, by the mere light of reason, can possibly discover.

If a man forces such nonsense before the public, he will assuredly be treated with the "ridicule" he deserves even by persons who know as little as himself about the busines, but "scorn" is a graver matter, and I cannot estimate Protector's deserts in this respect, unless, Mr. Editor, you can help me to a knowledge of his motives, for I pretend not like him to derive those of others. I am willing however to suppose this may be beyond his merits, but you, Mr. Editor, should exercise a wholesome discretion, consider the value of your own columns, and of your readers time, for productions like this, (however harmless), cannot in any way compensate for the trouble expended by either.

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

The Trotting Match between Mr. Gray's A. Horse, White Rose, 15 hands. 10st. 6lbs. and Captain Fawcett's Turcomann Galloway, Dr. O'Toole, 13 hands 2½ inches, 10st. 4lbs. came off on the race course on Wednesday, the 4th Instant, in favour of the Galloway. The Doctor broke once in the first half mile, but was only headed for a few seconds in the 7th. ½ mile. The Horse a superb mover, was unfortunately too much addicted to breaking, and did so in almost every half mile. The 9th. half mile was beautifully contested, the Dr. having allowed his antagonist to close, rated it with him neck and neck, till White Rose broke, and left the gallant little O'Toole no excuse for going a head, and winning cleverly by about 50 yards.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We think BACCALAUREUS might condense his communication into a couple of dozen lines, and shall then be happy to give it a place. We do not like having any thing to do with such particulars as those communicated by S. P.

THE COURIER.

SATURDAY, MAY 7, 1831.

We received yesterday, we are sorry to say however, at too late an hour for publication; a small file of the Glasgow Herald as late as the 12th Nov., brought by the Elizabeth. They contain many minute particulars of events which were only generally noticed in the Galignani's Messengers, from which we extracted so much of the latest European in-...The particulars of the bombardment ...Welling-

It is not a little ridiculous to observe the credulity with which some of the Calcutta Newspapers circulate reports upon the authority of letters said to have been brought by the Steamer in her late trip from the Red Sea, without for a moment considering the impossibility there is, that many of them can be authentic. Among the apparent fabrications which they appear to have seized with the greatest avidity, is that respecting an alledged offer on the part of the new Ministry to prolong the Company's Charter for six years, for the purpose of allowing them to wind up their concerns. This, which appears at first sight, so very unlikely to have come from persons, who by the last accounts had hardly taken possession of their respective Offices, gives us the greater surprise, when we recollect the sagacious doubts which the profound editors at first entertained about the news, which conveyed an account of the late change in the Ministry. To us, it appears most unlikely that they could have matured their plans sufficiently to have commenced negociations upon a subject of such importance as the renewal of the charter, when Lord Brougham states in his speech upon the reformation of the Law, that he had been unable at the early period in which he brought forward his motion, to consult upon it with those associated with him by ties of office.

The rumours respecting his Majesty's intention of adding six of the company's officers to his establishment of aides de camp, we sincerely trust will eventually prove true, though we must say, its having appeared in the Calcutta papers at a time when they appear to be wofully pressed for news, militates somewhat against its probability.

Before we close these remarks upon the only articles of any interest that have lately appeared in the Bengal journals, we cannot help observing that the Editor of the Hurkaru, in a fit of unusual peevishness, (occasioned we presume by the general aspect of his late papers,) accuses the Bombay press of "Squeezing out trickling rills of extracts" from the French and English papers brought by the Steamer; assuming we presume upon equally good authority with his letters by the same opportunity, that we are in possession of copious files of both. As our readers will probably be able, without our assistance, to admire the beautiful metaphor he uses, we shall not dwell upon his wonderful command of figurative language, and shall content ourselves by observing that every extract of the slightest interest in Galignani's Messengers, which is the only file of papers we have received, has already appeared in our columns. That such unfortunately is the case, we have the greatest reason to regret, as the want of interesting matter forces us on the present occasion, to curtail a little, the usual demensions of our paper.

CALCUTTA.

"It is reported that information has been received from Bombay by the Hugh Lindsay of the nature of the negotiations that have already taken place between the Court of Directors and the New Ministers. It is stated that Ministers have intimated their intention of withholding a renewal of the Charter; but have offered the Directors a period of six years to wind up their affairs. The Directors ask ten years, and consider that in a period of twenty years they would be able to discharge the whole of the Indian debt from the surplus revenue of India.

Report adds, that it is not the intention of Lord Bentinck to return to Calcutta, but that he purposes to remain in the Upper Provinces until the period has arrived, beyond which he has determined not to prolong his stay in India, when His Lordship will proceed to England vid Bombay. Whispers also are abroad about certain Secretaries having requested to be relieved from their duties with his Lordship, who seems determined that Secretaryships shall no longer be sinecures. The proffered resignation, after a little cool reflection, was prudently withdrawn."—Indian Gazette, April 18.

COLOMBIA.

(From the Pennsylvania Inquirer, Dec. 1.)

We only had time this morning to make a very hasty examination of our files from Carthagena. Among other papers which have come to hand, are several numbers of El Duende (The Fairy,) the 1st number of which was published on the 16th of August. It is warmly in favour of Bolivar, as indeed is the case with all the Carthagena papers, but at the same time it invites persons of respectability who are in the habit of writing for the Aurora, (a paper of opposite principles in Bogota,) to forward communications for its columns, which it promises to insert provided they avoid personalities. From the number for Oct. 2nd, we translate the following. THE GRAND DRAMA OR COLOMBIA IN A BLAZE.

Programma of the fifth and last Act.—Spectres, harpies, phantoms and demons. Heaven, hell, earth and sea, in commotion. The Ministers, brokers, conspirators and traitors, are removed. Suddenly the bow of peace appears in the horizon, and the spectres, harpies, phantoms and demons, disappear. The general agitation subsides, and people, tired of an absurdity, make their appeal to reason. She presents herself in the Hall of Congress, with the base of the Acts of 2d September. The Grand Khan is relieved from the command, and thenceforth there are no more thunders, lightnings, flashes, sundogs hurricanes, earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, inundations, floods, water spouts, torrents, phenomena, comets, meteors, harpies, phantoms, or demons. The great man who was ordered to leave the country, is elected Chief. He is entreated to save his own glory by saving Colombia.

El Registro of Oct. 21st contains an address of Gen. Montilla to the people of Rio Hache, ...ho it appears had joined Venezuela, dated ...rters on the march, Soledad, Sept. ...ludes as follows:

...to my voice as that ...anion. Recall ...; incorporate ... Magdalena; ...nous persons ...g them t...

justice—and I offer you, in the name of the supreme Government the past, and the fullest guarantees for the future. But if you madly persist in giving place to intrigue, and disregarding the salutary counsels of reason and propriety, the troops which are already on your borders, will reduce you to a fatal condition. I will exert all the power necessary to extinguish the evil; and Magdalena will remember with sorrow the necessity she was under of inflicting an exemplary chastisement upon her disobedient children.

MARIAKO MONTILLA.

PROCLAMATION

Rafael Urdaneta, General-in Chief of the armies of the Republic, charged with executive power, &c. To the inhabitants of the Department of Cauca.

CAUCANS! Misfortune has placed you under the authority of the assassins of the Grand Marshal of the Ayacucho, and they now are abusing your honour, to conceal their crime.

CAUCANS! Will you permit your names to go down to posterity, associated with those of distinguished criminals? No: even liberty, that boon of Heaven, ye could not receive without a blush, from hands so impure, stained with the illustrious blood of an innocent victim.

CAUCANS! Colombia is now in arms against crime, and no one, without doing injustice to your honourable character, can doubt that you belong to the cause of justice.

CAUCANS! The liberty which the assasins invoke, and the Constitution which they affect to defend, are mere pretexts for warding off the national indignation and escaping the vengeance of the laws. Do not stain yourselves with the crime which covers them; deny them your co-operation; and very soon you shall see the punishment of the villians who disgrace you.

Bogota, Sept. 28, 1830

RAFAEL URDANETA.

REVOLUTION IN COLOMBIA.

(From the Pennsylvania Inquirer, Dec. 2.)

We have before us a printed address by the late President of Colombia, Joaquin Mosquera, "to all the individuals comprehended in the assembly armed against the existing constitutional order of things." It is dated "Bogota, August 23d," and too long for us to publish to-day. It is signed by himself, and by Asuero, Secretary of the Interior and Justice. The President, in a very firm and manly tone, refuses to listen to their representations, while they present themselves in force, in oppo... to good order and the laws, particularly the 104th 105th, and 154th articles of the Constitution. [The last mentoned is the article which we quoted some time since, in speaking of the professions of Bolivar's opposing the government as directly violating the laws.] He expresses a resolution to make the best of his means of defence, but, to avoid the shedding of more blood, offers an amnesty to those disposed to make advantage of it.

From a letter published in the Mercurio of Saturday, we derive the following particulars, which are corroborated on good authority from private sources: Manuela Sænz gave green belts to several individuals of his friends by which badge they soon began to distinguish each other. The Battalion Callao was sent out of the city on the evening of the 19th, for Tunja, where it was to be disbanded. He, however, had left the city on that morning; and appears to have been one of the most active persons in the intrigue for Bolivar who, as the poet of last evening particularly pronounces, has the voice of Colombia in his favour! Perhaps Mr. Moore may tell a different story.

The letter above quoted further informs us, that the factionists about Bogota produced an excitement among some of the peasantry, by telling them that the government intended to destroy religion: that Dr. Margallo was in prison; that several of the clergy had been murdered, and that Caicedo had banished the archbishop of Purification: in short, that Bolivar was coming to save their religion. Some papers are again attempting to colour this revolution, and to justify it, but all this scene of confusion and bloodshed has been produced (and we hope it may be distinctly remembered,) at a time when the country was in quietness and peace, and merely for the purpose of restoring Bolivar to power.—New York Daily Adv.

LATEST FROM COLOMBIA.

(From the Pennsylvania Reporter, December 3.

By the brig William, Capt.———, we have received a Maracaibo letter of Oct. 18th, containing intelligence from Bogota, to Sept. 16th. We have also Bogota papers to the 12th inclusive.

On the 4th Sept. an arrangement was agreed on between the Commissioners of president Mosquera and those of Col. Pincress, commander of the Eallas battalion (which entered the capital as conquerors on the 28th of August,) repealing the condition embraced in the Articles of Capitulation, which required certain individuals to depart for Carthagena within three days.

The individuals referred to are as fellows: Manuel Antonio and Juan Manuel Arrubias, Francisco and Jose Manuel Montoya, Vincent Juan Nepomucco Azuero, Ignacio Morquez, Gen. Jose Maria Mantilla, Cols. Francisco Barriga and Jose Maria Gaitan and Dr. Jua... Vargas. As the case stands at present, the... are permitted to continue in Bogota, enjoying a... the securities belonging to other citizens,—p... vided they remain quiet in their occupatio... and obedien... ...uthorities, with... giving i... ...ct them of medi...
